

Help students reach their academic potential

Patricia Y. Lara ME '18 began her postsecondary education in the community college system. She is passionate about becoming an academic counselor to help students navigate college and reach their goals.

The Master of Education in Educational Counseling (EC) program will prepare you for career success in academic advising and student affairs positions that require advanced counseling skills, especially in community colleges and four-year colleges or universities. Specifically focused on the higher education context, USC Rossier's curriculum is grounded in a student development theory perspective, rather than a psychology perspective. The program blends theory with practice — including fieldwork and practicum experience — to give you the foundation needed to build one-on-one relationships with students and help them achieve their goals.

Both full-time and part-time options are available.

GAIN HANDS-ON EXPERIENCE

The EC program's 210 hours of fieldwork will help you connect theory to practice under the supervision of a seasoned educational counselor. You will gain invaluable practical experience that will strengthen your professional philosophy and abilities. Through the master's seminar or thesis, you will further integrate learning from throughout the curriculum for a summative, reflective and forward-looking experience that will prepare you to enter the educational counseling field.

In addition to fieldwork, USC Rossier's graduate assistantships provide hands-on experience in higher education settings and preparation for your desired career upon graduation. While the majority of EC students participate in graduate assistantships on the USC campus, the city of Los Angeles is home to many colleges and universities. With the full support and guidance of our team, you will have the freedom to select and apply for an opportunity tailored to your personal goals. Graduate assistantship positions are compensated by an hourly wage, tuition remission, or, in the case of residential education, room and board.

OPTIONAL: PUPIL PERSONNEL SERVICES SCHOOL COUNSELING CREDENTIAL

Following the completion of your master's degree, you can expand your professional opportunities for school counseling positions by completing the requirements to be recommended for a Pupil Personnel Services (PPS) School Counseling credential. The requirements for the PPS credential include the completion of 18 additional units through the School Counseling Post-Master's Certificate program.
