

Lead equitable educational organizations

Cory Buckner EdD '17 is the Assistant Director of Athletic Academic Support at the University of Southern California. While at USC Rossier, his research focused on the identity formation of black male student-athletes, support services for student-athlete re-entry, and race, equity and access in collegiate athletics.

The Doctor of Education in Educational Leadership (EDL) program, which results in an EdD degree, will prepare you to understand and apply relevant research and theory as a leader of K-12 schools, universities, community colleges or other educational organizations. Designed to accommodate your schedule as a working professional, this three-year program trains you to become a critically conscious leader with the skills to address inequities in education that affect learning opportunities and outcomes.

DISSERTATION IN PRACTICE

The dissertation in practice is a doctoral dissertation with a more practical focus than a traditional dissertation. Under the guidance of faculty in your concentration, you will apply relevant research methods to tackle a problem of practice that impedes access to equitable educational opportunities and outcomes. The purpose of the dissertation in practice is to equip you with the knowledge and skills you will use to address existing problems in your workplace well beyond your completion of the program. Format options for the dissertation in practice vary by concentration.

CONCENTRATIONS

Each concentration path consists of four courses. You must have career experience relevant to the concentration to which you apply.

- Educational Psychology (Ed Psych): Learning and motivation in diverse social contexts.
- Higher Education Administration (Higher Ed): Student development, administration, finance and accountability practices that ensure equity, diversity and access.
- K-12 Leadership in Urban School Settings (K-12): Effective leadership practices for diverse K-12 classrooms, schools and school districts.

- Leading Instructional Change (Instructional Change): Theories, practices and policies to prepare leaders to develop the knowledge and skills of others in their K-12 and Higher Education settings to address inequities in curriculum and instruction.

DESIGNED FOR WORKING PROFESSIONALS

Prior to the dissertation phase in your third year, you will take classes in the evening one night per week on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday from 4 p.m. to 10 p.m. at the USC University Park Campus in Los Angeles.

ON-CAMPUS IMMERSION

As a student in the program, you are required to attend an immersion experience on the USC University Park Campus a few weeks before the course start date. The immersion experience, which includes the orientation to the program, will provide the opportunity to meet your classmates and faculty members, develop the academic skills necessary for success in the program and explore a process for critical reflection. Travel and accommodations for the immersion are not included in the cost of the program.
